There is a long tradition of shorebird hunting in North America that ended at the beginning of the century when laws were passed that banned killing and selling migratory birds. These life-sized wooden carvings are painstakingly detailed and painted to reflect the actual birds and their plumage. The carving is also a study in the use of negative space. The marshland habitat is seen in the viewer's imagination as the diorama flows in the composition of the piece. Decoys - Other Makers - Miniatures/Decoratives..
